

Nord Stream: A boot the U.S. is not happy about

A boot brings truth around the blasting of Nord Stream pipelines?

Peter Hanseler

Tue 06 Jun 2023

Peter Hanseler

For a few weeks it was quieter again around the biggest terrorist attack in the history of mankind.

Now a new revelation: the blog "The Grayzone" took part in probably the first independent expedition to the Nord Stream attack.

During this expedition a boot was found, which corresponds to that model, which is used by the American Navy. The article with Grayzone is a very good read.

Question: What is the boot doing there?

"We're as sure as you can be when you weren't there yourself."

VoicefromRussia reported many times about the blasting of the Nord Stream pipeline in September 2022.

We always assumed that the interest in the destruction was to be found with the USA and certainly not with the Russians.

I began my series of articles with two short articles in which I had "Inspector Columbo" interview both President Biden ("Inspector Columbo Investigates Biden") and President Putin ("Inspector Columbo Investigates Putin").

After Seymour Hersh's exposé article in February, VoicefromRussia rolled up the whole story in the article "The Silence of the Lambs: Nord Stream Blasting - Act of War by the USA - the West Remains Silent", discussing American policy regarding pipelines between Germany and Russia up to the 70s.

After that, when American and German newspapers published a distress story and claimed that a crew of six people on a sailboat had managed to carry out the biggest industrial attack in the history of mankind, we gladly laughed along with the article "Nord Stream - now it's getting grotesque".

"We're as sure as you can be when you weren't there yourself."

Now one of the greatest stories of this century is one chapter - read: boots - richer.

ARTICLE TAGS:

Analysis Hersh, Seymour Russia US Ukraine Columbo, Inspector Nord Stream NATO
The Grayzone