In today's Western media, President Putin's speech is presented in a fragmented and tendentious way - not to our surprise.

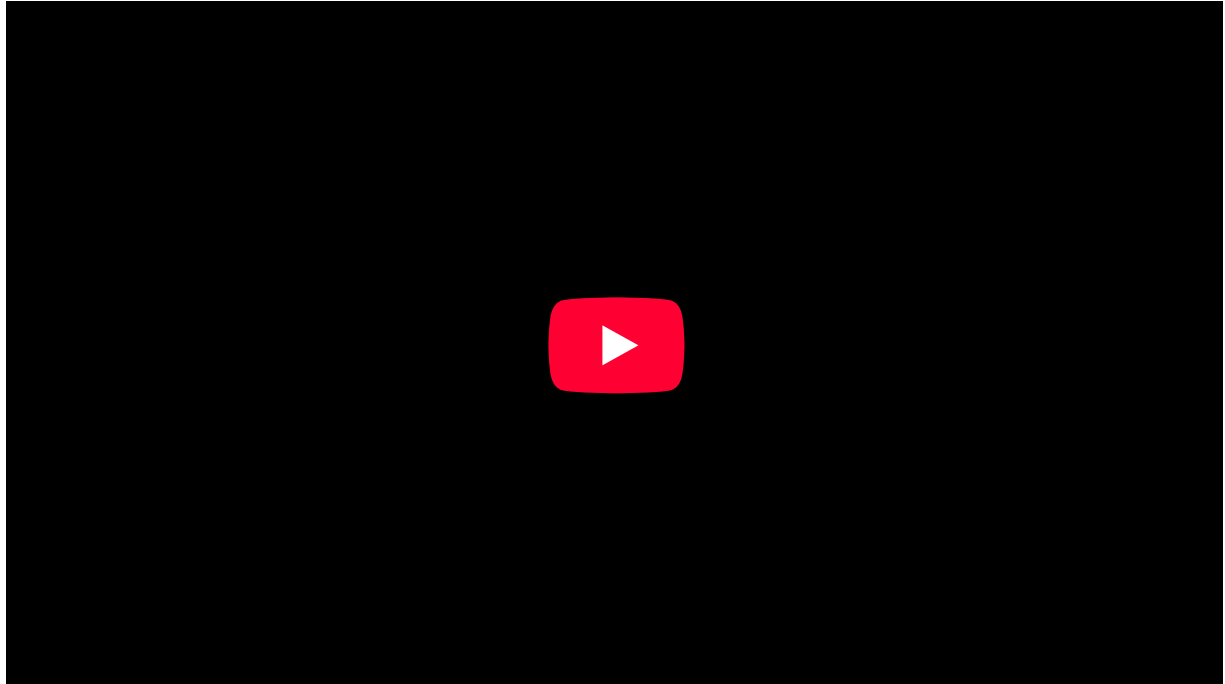

Yesterday's parade was, on the one hand, a tribute to the veterans of the Second World War, some of whom are over a hundred years old, and to whom Russia owes nothing less than its existence.

"There is nothing to add to President Putin's words."

On the other hand, the Russian government decided to make the parade smaller and more modest. The West is at war with Russia. This modesty has style and class - and no, it is not a sign of weakness.

Instead of twisting the truth, today we publish the speech with a great English simultaneous translation from the YouTube channel enlightened prophets.

There is nothing to add to President Putin's words.
